Group Economics: Greenwood

What is group economics: By definition, group economics is when a collective group pools their money together to benefit a common interest.

A great example of group economics was Black Wall Street, a district in Tulsa, Oklahoma, founded and developed by African Americans that grew and flourished as a Black economic hub. At the turn of the 20th century, African Americans founded and developed the Greenwood district in Tulsa, Oklahoma. Built on what had formerly been Indian Territory, the community grew and flourished as a Black economic and cultural mecca—until May 31, 1921.

That's when a white mob began a rampage through some 35 square blocks, decimating the community known proudly as "Black Wall Street." Armed rioters, many deputized by local police, looted and burned down businesses, homes, schools, churches, a hospital, hotel, public library, newspaper offices and more. While the official death toll of the Tulsa race massacre was 36, historians estimate it may have been as high as 300. As many as 10,000 people were left homeless.

The incident stands as one most horrific acts of racial violence, and domestic terrorism, ever committed on American soil.

Group Economics: Divine Nine

Divine Nine (D9) are a group of historically black collegiate Greek letter fraternities and sororities.

D9 members are Presidents & Vice President of United States, CEO's, business owners, executives, leaders, educators, doctors, lawyers, service veterans, students, alumni, etc.

People who practice group economics band together for one or more reasons, including building generational wealth and providing economic support for their communities. When you implement group economics into your lifestyle, you make a conscious effort to financially support one another's common endeavors.

Why This Is Important?

Due to the ongoing pandemic, small businesses have suffered immensely due to less than usual foot traffic and sales. Research shows the buying power amongst African-Americans has reached more than $1 trillion per year. Yet, today, only 2 cents of every dollar is used to fund Black-owned businesses, and the Black dollar only circulates a total of 6 hours before leaving the Black community.

There is a historical timeline of economic injustice among African-Americans that is crippling in building wealth. However, African-Americans have the power to responsibly control their spending and shop at Black-owned businesses to help maintain their economic growth and independence.

Statistics show that when a community consciously promotes practicing group economics, it will improve the quality of life for the population living in those areas. The benefits of group economics are financial independence, promotion of financial literacy, self-sufficiency, business growth, and multi-generational wealth building.
